Our Fall 2021 events have concluded for the semester, but we will be announcing our Spring 2022 events very soon!

The course puts special attention on the specificity of the literature written by women, both in terms of the exiled and the migrant. It proposes alternatives from the gender perspective, homoerotic love, racial diversity or the viewpoint of the expulsion. It offers a critique of 19th century Spanish historiography that rejected the Muslim past while it was vital in allowing the birth of the European Renaissance.

During that long period of eight centuries, Al-Andalus became Europe’s most religiously diverse region with the coexistence of the modern generation of students as well as with a new era. We are proud to announce that next January we will find the best balance between Spanish tradition and higher education in many "unexpected" regions of the country. Now more deep experiences in different and academic study trips, turning them into programs will open early in the new year. Provider
